Intercultural Pilots: Reinvention of transnational Youth(net)work

Trainingcourse | 11. – 17. March 2017 in the arco-Forum Wiesbaden

"Intercultural Pilots: Reinvention of Transnational Youth(net)work" is an international training program for specialists and peer leaders in intercultural youth work and aims at the further development and reinvention of international youth work. The project wants to lay a foundation for a new kind of cooperation. The aim is to harmonize apparently indissoluble contradictions: collectivization & individual strengths, standardization & flexibility, regionalism & global perspective.

The objectives of the training are:

- A) To help equip a new generation of youth workers with the skills and selfconfidence to accompany innovative and sustainable intercultural projects
- B) To develop innovative, creative and holistic projects with those present
- C) Investigate subject-oriented, creativity-promoting and efficient educational work and provide the basis for the pursuit and appropriation of these principles.

In addition to the knowledge transfer, the project aims at the cooperation capacity of the partners. A strong network is to emerge that is capable of increasing the effect that each individual partner can affect. In which the partners as colleagues meet, to learn about themselves and their structures and to formulate common goals and strategies. The impact of the partners' projects can be increased by the prospects and co-operation potentials of the transnational network.

Pilotprojects are to be investigated - as well as being formed and initiated out of the training. The participants should leave the training with a reliable skillset and support system to become the "pilots" of new projects.
